A Transformation and a Small-Village Feel

Copenhagen has undergone a transformation in the past decade and emerged as a “must-stop” destination in Europe. This environmentally friendly city has earned top billing from foodies, students, and those seeking refuge in one of the happiest countries in the world. Though it boasts more than 600,000 residents, Copenhagen retains an old-world, small-village feel – with more bicycles than cars traveling its streets.

Interns in Copenhagen will typically experience an informal work environment where teamwork is key and work-life balance is a common goal.
